Temwa's school had a sale. The aim of organizing the sale was to raise money for buying sports equipment. During the sale, some children brought in vegetables they had grown while others brought drinks and cakes they had made. Temwa's class had a craft stall.

The children in various classes at the school made their own things to sell. Some of them brought things that their parents or elder brothers and sisters had made. There were lots of beautiful things of the stall. I wish "I could weave baskets," Temwa said. "So do I," said her friend.

"But you can paint beautiful pictures. I am sure lots of people will want to buy them." Temwa's friend added.

That afternoon was very successful. The model boats. The boys carved were very popular with small children who wanted to play with them. The mats and baskets the children made were beautiful too and useful and they were sold quickly. Temwa was pleased when people brought her paintings.

At last there was only one thing left on the stall. It was a large wall hanging and it was the most expensive thing in the sale. "Its very well made a colourful with beautiful pattern," said Temwa's. "But it's quite expensive and too big four our living room at homes."

Just them, the Headteachers came to the stall with some friends. "Congratulations!" He said. You have done very well. "How much have you made on your stall?" Temwa told him. "That's wonderful!" he said. "We have raised almost all the money we needed for the sports equipment."

"Excuse me," said a lady who was with the head teacher. "Is this lovely wall hanging still for sale?" she picked it up and looked at the price sticker. "Oh, no thought Temwa. "She's going to say that it's too expensive!" But the lady smiled and looks out her purse. "Thats very lucky," she said. "This wall hanging is just what I need for my office."
